

REBUILDING: Planning and Permits

The SLRD manages the zoning and permitting process for new construction projects in the region, including building projects related to wildfire loss and damage. Planners and building officials are available to review your rebuilding ideas and guide you through the regulations and requirements specific to your plans. If some parts of the process need to be done externally – we'll provide that information.

The rebuilding process may seem daunting after a natural disaster, but support is available.

STEP 1

Prepare your property for cleanup.

Before rebuilding can begin - you'll need to prepare your property for debris and waste material removal. At least ten days before debris removal, email utilities@slrd.bc.ca with a Hazardous materials survey report. Please refer to the Debris and Waste Management section of our Downton Lake Wildfire Recovery page for information related to this process.

STEP 2

Rebuild.

When your property is prepared and you're ready to begin rebuilding, visit the SLRD's Building Department webpage for information on the building process including links to apply for Building Permit online using our CloudPermit application platform.

Depending on how you choose to rebuild, there could be Development Permits that might apply to your project. Visit the SLRD's Development Application Forms and Guides webpage for additional information and resources.

A Wildfire Development Permit is required to accompany your building permit. Complete a Development Permit Application form and submit it to planning@slrd.bc.ca.

Please review the zoning bylaw for your area in its most up-to-date version. A number of regulations have changed in recent years and there may be new rules applicable to your property.

How do I obtain a Riparian Development Permit when rebuilding?

Are you rebuilding in a confirmed riparian zone? You'll need to submit a Development Application Form to the SLRD Planning Department (planning@slrd.bc.ca) along with:

- a payment of $150
- a site plan
- a Riparian Assessment report prepared by a Qualified Environmental Professional (QEP).

The QEP you hire will submit this report to the Aquatic Ecosystems Branch of the Ministry of Water, Land & Resource Stewardship, which is fast-tracking approvals for wildfire cleanup and rebuilding applications. Once the Province approves the report, the SLRD will issue a Riparian Development Permit, at which point cleanup with heavy machinery can be undertaken.

Note that this permit cannot be used for both cleanup and future construction. One permit must be submitted for cleanup, and after cleanup. A second permit can be submitted if you wish to rebuild within 30 meters of the lake.

What if I'm ready to start building?

You will need to submit a Building Permit Application, the hazardous material test results (noted in Debris and Waste Management section of Recovery page), and receipts for disposal. For more information, visit building permit webpage.

If you need to bring more than ten cubic meters of soil onto the property from outside your property's boundaries, please email us a Soil Deposit Application form.

Other development permits, such as a Wildfire Development Permit and an additional Riparian Development Permit (as noted above), may be required before Building Permit issuance.

Questions regarding the building process can be emailed to bldgofficial@slrd.bc.ca.
